Project Title:

China and the Caribbean in the 21st century

Brief Abstract:

This project studies China's emergence in the Caribbean as an important economic and political partner and competitor that may become decisive in shaping the developmental trajectories of the countries in the region and the lives of the 40 million people who inhabit them. The growing relationship renders the Caribbean a vastly understudied laboratory to investigate the impacts of China as a new development partner, and the potential challenge that China poses to the dominant global liberal order.
