When we first applied for the AAPR&C programme we weren't exactly sure what it was about. We knew that it had to do with working with people and this is what we wanted to do. Now we know that Public Relations is much more than just talking to people. It is far more complicated, and much more interesting, than we had thought. Also, our communication skills have really improved since we not only learn English but also study Putonghua. All three of us are glad that we selected this programme and we plan to work in Public Relations after we get our BAs in communication-related disciplines.
