33. These major commitments and new initiatives are in addition to our more traditional programmes. Many of these we tend to take for granted. We are, for example, constantly improving the quality of our primary and secondary education. Our housing programme remains one of the biggest and most impressive in the world. Some three million people - over half our population - now live in Housing Authority homes. Nearly 400,000 new flats will be built by the Authority between now and 2001 - a major area of continuing Government investment in the future of the community. All these programmes make use of our economic success to improve Hong Kong's quality of life.
