Sharing on Library Development of the University of Southern California Libraries

The Library was honored to have invited Dean Catherine Quinlan, Dean of the University of Southern California (USC) Libraries on 27 May 2013, to conduct a sharing session with the Library on the latest development of USC Libraries. It is a good opportunity for Library staff to get updated and learn from USC Libraries, one of the benchmark universities of CityU.

USC Libraries is also one of the partner institutions of the OAPS project and Dean Quinlan joined the 10th OAPS Task Force Meeting held at Singapore on 3 – 6 May 2013. Dean Catherine Quinlan expressed that the USC professors are happy to join the OAPS project and they are excited to have their student projects being profiled through the project.

In her presentation, Dean Quinlan shared a number of initiatives of their libraries, including their annual user-satisfaction survey, new online and digital initiatives, their recent and upcoming events, and their events reports in the media. The Library is very grateful for her inspiring and resourceful sharing which will be of useful reference to the Library’s future development.

The sharing session was followed by a visit to the Science and Engineering Collection area, featuring a backdrop on Madam Marie Curie, the first female Nobel laureate, to inform students of the outstanding achievements of Madam Curie in the fields of chemistry and physics, with the aim to inspire them in their discovery learning journeys.
