THE SYMPOSIUM

Hosted by the RMIT Centre for Business and Human Rights and the Public Law and Human Rights Forum of City University Hong Kong, this online Symposium will nurture the next generation of business and human rights scholars in Asia and Oceania. It will foster collaboration with peers to develop innovative ways that business can use to embed human rights in their practice and supply chain governance, and to explore alternative approaches to how law can better promote business respect for human rights. The Symposium will also offer a forum for business and human rights doctoral researchers to engage in legal, policy and practice debates that have particular currency in the region, while offering unparalleled opportunities to strengthen participants' writing and research skills.

An international learning platform for emerging scholars in the fields of business ethics, business and human rights, corporate accountability and sustainable enterprises.

WHO SHOULD APPLY?

Doctoral researchers at both law, business/management and other schools are encouraged to apply. The Symposium should interest those working in the areas of business ethics, business and human rights, corporate social responsibility, modern slavery, corporate accountability, climate change, sustainable and social enterprises.
