In this paper, bivariate wavelets from B-splines on the regular triangular partitions are constructed. These bivariate wavelets are different from the ones which are constructed from tensor products of univariate splines. The advantage and disadvantage of these wavelets will be discussed. The approximation properties will be explored. The applications in the signal processing and in solving integral and differential equations will also be investigated.