The talk will highlight some recent results on the minimal support basis for the orthogonal complement of a univariate spline space as a subspace of a larger spline space of the same degree, but with more knots. The elements of this basis are called B-wavelets. We discuss construction, stability, computational aspects, and give examples of their use.